THE REPUBLIC OF FLOWERS

An Advertisement

By Charles Brooks Smith

There is no Floral Kingdom—it's a misnomer. "The Kingdom of Flowers," sang Keats. Poetic license!

There is no Aristocracy among Flowers—no caste, no classes. The Beautiful Realm where they dwell is a Republic. And a very democratic Republic at that.

NATURE IS THE PUREST OF DEMOCRACIES.

Flowers fling no favors to Rich that the Poor may not have. They appeal no more to the Plute than to the Pauper—to the Tutored than to the Ignorant.

It is the Reception of that Appeal by the individual's heart and mind that marks THE Difference. ALL feel it—part only can explain it.

I

Take Easter! The regal residence is redolent of roses and lilies, and tulips and violets and hydrangeas—and brilliant with scarlet and lavender, and yellow and pink. All this stands for something DEEPER than mere custom in celebrating a great Religious Anniversary.

II

Take Easter! The lowliest hovel will flaunt a flower—e'en tho the family larder suffer a sacrifice. High up on the window ledge of a ramshackle tenement may be spied a richly-colored bloom, the gayer for the sunshine haloing its radiant head.

THAT means something THERE, too—in the Haunts of Poverty. Many, many things that the Heart feels, tho the mind fails to grasp.

III

I thing Materlinck hit the Bull's Eye of explanation when he wrote: "There is nothing puerile in Nature; and he who becomes impassioned of a Flower, wraps his passion round a small thing that always contains a Great Truth!"

IV

And Here is a Great Truth!

DUDLEY'S, the FLORISTS, have the biggest Easter Display this year than they have had in the half century they have been Aide-de-Camp on Nature's Staff.

They are booking orders now for Easter delivery. Is your order booked, gentle reader, at
